Saddest part is that [illegible] is generally a good reporter. And ~13,000 hospitalizations would be a big number - almost as many as NY at the peak. But the media is so in love with the disaster narrative, so ready to believe the worst, that that figure raises no eyebrows.

The JeffCo mask language is confusing - this may be a common problem:

The crisis in the US hospital system is real and spreading nationwide:
heckershospitalreview.com/finance/45-hos

1. Allentown, Pa.-based Lehigh Valley Health Network has furloughed about 900 employees who work at its physician practices, according to The Morning Call. The email obtained by the publication stated that furloughed workers can return to work after in-person patient visits return to normal levels.

2. Halifax Health, based in Daytona Beach, Fla, has placed 300 staff members on a mandatory four-month furlough, according to The Daytona Beach News Journal. The news comes just nine days after the system asked for volunteers to take furloughs. The health system is also mandating that nonclinical staff not included in the furlough take one day off per week.

3. Citing financial pressure from the COVID-19 pandemic, Escondido, Calif.-based Palomar Health has issued temporary layoffs for 221 employees, according to NBC San Diego. The furloughs will last 21 days and may be extended. Palomar Health said it is facing a significant revenue decline and incurred more when it's not in school...there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

Hello Alex,

My name is nd I've been following you on Twitter quite a bit. I live in oronto, so we've actually been subjected to a lockdown for a bit longer than U.S. cities.

I'm so happy to see someone like you bringing to light the sheer insanity of the lockdowns and the crushing impact it's having on society. It infuriates me to see such a reckless experiment on humanity.

I have a three year old, so not school aged, but to say it's been a challenge is the understatement of the year. My brother, on the other hand, has two school aged children -

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

1/ Quick Florida update: On June 3, the state had 57,000 resident cases. Today: 98K, up 40K in 19 days.

TERRIFYING!

Except: on June 3, 7500 of those cases, or 13%, were in people over 75. (Roughly 105 a day from the start of the epidemic.)

Yes; @cdcgov is now reporting positive tests - 2.85 million and individual cases - 2.3 million - separately. And the gap looks to be widening, though the CDC makes it very hard to find daily historical trends in positive tests.

I agree the hospitalization rise is worrisome, and I don't want to try to reflexively explain away bad data. But as one goes up the acuity scale - from tests to hospitalizations to ICUs to vents to deaths, the surge shrinks at every level...

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 4m

It is possible the widening gap is mostly a function of timing, in which case you're right and we have much reason to worry. It is also possible changes in admission standards, wider testing, different case mix, etc are what is really driving what we're seeing...

Perspective from a hospital exec who has emailed before and whose chain includes several Sunbelt facilities. He is highly confident overall (though note that his hospitals are seeing shorter lengths of stay, which cuts a little against the longer censuses).

Things that are different than earlier this year:
1. Treatment has changed. Less quick to intubate and quicker to administer drugs that are having positive effects. Result, lower death rate and lower length of stay on admitted patients.
2. As some other volume comes back, we definitely have a subset of patients that come in for non-Covid reasons, yet test positive for Covid. Obviously this "counts" as a Covid admit. Result, more healthy people with Covid and lower death rate/length of stay. As a side note I will say, it's a little disingenuous for people to say this is hospitals' attempt to game the system and get higher reimbursement — we always document all diagnoses, that's just the proper way to document.
3. Most markets are doing a much better job of isolating the most at risk (ie SNF population). Area of

From someone in Arizona (I have confirmed his identity). Obviously, cases are really rising, but there seems to be at least some double-counting going on.

the start of the COVID pandemic. We are all indebted to you, and those like you, for your commitment to the truth even in the face of hysterical levels of scrutiny.

I live in Arizona and know an AZDHS employee who is involved in the testing protocols here (won't share her name). According to her, every person seen in the hospital—outpatient and inpatient alike—receives a COVID test each day they are in the hospital. That's obvious and normal, but what may be abnormal is that the same COVID test is repeated every day for each day a person is in the hospital and each positive test counts as a separate COVID test/case. This means that a single COVID patient will likely return several positive "cases." Worse, anyone who is in the hospital for elective procedures—an ACL in the hospital for elective procedures—an ACL surgery, for instance—but who tests positive for COVID (and this is happening, according to her) will also report as a new COVID "case" (and as a COIVD hospitalization) for each day they are hospitalized regardless of their symptoms and notwithstanding that they are in the hospital for reasons entirely unrelated to COVID.

Clearly, there are increasing numbers in Arizona, not disputing that. But the hospitalization numbers (and declining death rate) just don't add up and this may help, at least in part, to explain why.

To be clear, I don't think hospitalizations will be double-counted - one person in a bed is one person in a bed. The question is how many new "cases" - positive tests - result from duplicative tests of one person. We know that is happening to some extent from the @cdcgov data.

From Houston. Of note, the hospitals can easily add another 1,000
ICU beds - by their own estimate on this meter they have barely left the "green" zone.

5/ One last point here: Ferguson gives the lockdown credit, which is interesting - the UK only began ita lockdown 2 days ago, and the theory is that lockdowns take 2 weeks or more to work.

The @stanford antibody testing is out - it estimates ~3% of people in Santa Clara County (CA) have been infected and recovered, 50-plus times the estimate of confirmed active cases. More evidence #SARSCoV2 is far more widespread and thus less dangerous than expected.

without seroprevalence data to inform epidemic parameters. We measured the seroprevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara County. Methods On 4/3-4/4, 2,50 adult county residents for antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 using a lateral flow immunoassay. Participants were recruited using Facebook ads targeting a representative sample of the county by demographic and geographic characteristics. We report the prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in a sample of 3,330 people, adjusting for zip code, sex, and race/ethnicity. We also adjust for test performance characteristics using 3 different estimates: i) the test manufacturer's data, ii) a sample of 37 positives and 30 negatives controls tested at Stanford, and iii) a pooled weighted of both. Results The unadjusted prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara [illegible] The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases. Population prevalence estimates can now be used to calibrate epidemic and mortality projections.

Hello Alex,

My name is nd I've been following you on Twitter quite a bit. I live in oronto, so we've actually been subjected to a lockdown for a bit longer than U.S. cities.

I'm so happy to see someone like you bringing to light the sheer insanity of the lockdowns and the crushing impact it's having on society. It infuriates me to see such a reckless experiment on humanity.

I have a three year old, so not school aged, but to say it's been a challenge is the understatement of the year. My brother, on the other hand, has two school aged children -

Media reasonably consider 20M unemployed Americans as their main contribution to DNC 2020 campaign.

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

This is important because it is all part of the Dem/liberal playbook. The fact that the media has become nothing more than gossip rags and reality tv at its worst is horrifying. And many are believing it hook, line and sinker.

HUGE findings from Iran - a true random antibody sample of households finds that 21-33% of people have been infected and the true infection fatality rate is roughly 1 in 1,000 - among the lowest figures yet published.

120 COVID deaths today in AZ/FL/TX, which have 60MM people. (NYS had about 800 a day at peak - 20x as many per capita.)

Deaths lag. The rise in ICU cases is worrying. But this spike is now 2+ weeks old. We will know very soon if the rise in cases is truly clinically meaningful.

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

the start of the COVID pandemic. We are all indebted to you, and those like you, for your commitment to the truth even in the face of hysterical levels of scrutiny.

I live in Arizona and know an AZDHS employee who is involved in the testing protocols here (won't share her name). According to her, every person seen in the hospital—outpatient and inpatient alike—receives a COVID test each day they are in the hospital. That's obvious and normal, but what may be abnormal is that the same COVID test is repeated every day for each day a person is in the hospital and each positive test counts as a separate COVID test/case. This means that a single COVID patient will likely return several positive "cases." Worse, anyone who is in the hospital for elective procedures—an ACL in the hospital for elective procedures—an ACL surgery, for instance—but who tests positive for COVID (and this is happening, according to her) will also report as a new COVID "case" (and as a COVID hospitalization) for each day they are hospitalized regardless of their symptoms and notwithstanding that they are in the hospital for reasons entirely unrelated to COVID.

Clearly, there are increasing numbers in Arizona, not disputing that. But the hospitalization numbers (and declining death rate) just don't add up and this may help, at least in part, to explain why.

Hello Alex,

My name is nd I've been following you on Twitter quite a bit. I live in Toronto, so we've actually been subjected to a lockdown for a bit longer than U.S. cities.

I'm so happy to see someone like you bringing to light the sheer insanity of the lockdowns and the crushing impact it's having on society. It infuriates me to see such a reckless experiment on humanity.

I have a three year old, so not school aged, but to say it's been a challenge is the understatement of the year. My brother, on the other hand, has two school aged children - when he's not in school...there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

Hi Alex,

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

Thanks

Media reasonably consider 20M unemployed Americans as their main contribution to DNC 2020 campaign.

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

This is important because it is all part of the Dem/liberal playbook. The fact that the media has become nothing more than gossip rags and reality tv at its worst is horrifying. And many are believing it hook, line and sinker.

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

Even if the death rate has been underreported by a factor of 2 (which seems unlikely), this is maybe the strongest evidence yet that governments should end ALL lockdowns immediately.

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

1984 and Animal Farm get the attention, but Homage to Catalonia - Orwell's non-fiction on the Spanish Civil War - might be his best.

Wow, did he hate reporters:

"It was the first time that I had seen a person whose profession was telling lies--unless one counts journalists..."

3/ I guess one might say that the groupthink and lies Orwell saw in Spain informed his writing in 1984 - which was published in 1949, 11 years after Homage to Catalonia.

Apropos of nothing, of course.

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

1. Allentown, Pa.-based Lehigh Valley Health Network has furloughed about 900 employees who work at its physician practices, according to The Morning Call. The email obtained by the publication stated that furloughed workers can return to work after in-person patient visits return to normal levels.

2. Halifax Health, based in Daytona Beach, Fla, has placed 300 staff members on a mandatory four-month furlough, according to The Daytona Beach News Journal. The news comes just nine days after the system asked for volunteers to take furloughs. The health system is also mandating that nonclinical staff not included in the furlough take one day off per week.

3. Citing financial pressure from the COVID-19 pandemic, Escondido, Calif.-based Palomar Health has issued temporary layoffs for 221 employees, according to NBC San Diego. The furloughs will last 21 days and may be extended. Palomar Health said it is facing a significant revenue decline and incurred more

2/ So I assume @milbank has no idea what the data and studies actually say about where and how #SARS_COV_2 is transmitted, who's at risk, etc. Okay, fine. But here's the thing: suppose he's right? What part of this is funny?

6/ Final point: the paper concludes the real bottleneck is in trained staff and "priority should focus not only on increasing [ventilators]... but on growing the number of trained professionals."

But I guess bashing the WH for not nationalizing ventilator production is more fun.

A nurse can generally take care of one to two ventilated patients as they require close monitoring. If on vent, generally will require extra IV lines or arterial lines to allow monitoring of oxygen and extra meds (more pharmacy support), respiratory therapists, lab to run tests

1/ This is a remarkable turn from Neil Ferguson, who led the @imperialcollege authors who warned of 500,000 UK deaths - and who has now himself tested positive for #COVID;

2/ He now says both that the U.K. should have enough ICU beds and that the coronavirus will probably kill under 20,000 people in the U.K. - more than 1/2 of whom would have died by the end of the year in any case bc they were so old and sick.

3/ Essentially, what has happened is that estimates of the viruses transmissibility have increased - which implies that many more people have already gotten it than we realize - which in turn implies it is less dangerous.

3/ Now, the Imperial College team did offer one scenario which it speculated might enable beds not to be overwhelmed in the short term - a heavy "suppression" strategy lasting a minimum of FIVE months, through September at a minimum...

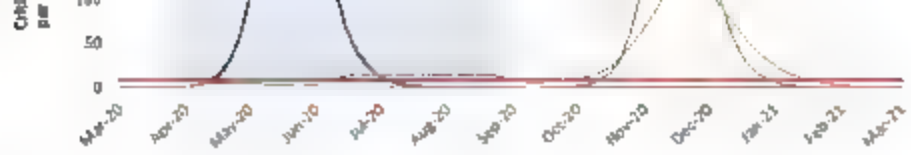
That is why we are being told not to leave our houses! To suppress the virus!!

Now when we stop suppressing, obviously the virus will come back.



The Imperial report is quite pessimistic about that scenario because it doesn't attempt to model strategies taken in Asia

As pointed out - that figure (fig3) does show a rebound when interventions turn off, but the plan is to keep interventions for (or to "pump the breaks") until a solution comes in place

You can see the figures under suppression in the 03/16 report are the ones Ferguson talked abt at the committee this week.

If we tanked the economy, drove tens of millions out of work, wiped out 401ks of retirees, interrupted the education of our children, & put $2trillion on a credit card for less deaths than the seasonal flu, you might see some civil unrest in this country like we've never seen.

And imagine if it turns out this has been going through the country for months, and they all acted 2-3 months too late. (In the Dems case, while perusing impeachment instead)

This could get very ugly. Hopefully only in the political sense.

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

6 37 227

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 8 abr.

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

2/ But it's crucial to understand WHY they failed.

There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.

9 152 568

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 Nis

3/ The models assumed (not unreasonably) that in places like New York, lockdowns had come TOO LATE. Between March 17 and March 25, hospitalizations in NY rose 7X. The models assumed that because of the time lag, the rise would go on UNTIL THE EFFECTS OF THE LOCKDOWN KICKED IN...

From a physician in Indiana who has signed and reviewed death certificates for almost 50 years: “doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis...”

Cause of death fallacy

Lee A. Fischer, M.D.

I'm a family physician who graduated med school in '72 and practiced family med in West Palm Beach for 31 years. During that time I signed hundreds of death certificates. For the last 25+ years I've reviewed and testified in hundreds of medical negligence cases. In the last 5 years 90% involved nursing home negligence. Obviously many of these nursing patients died so I review a lot of death certificates. I can tell you that more often than not the cause of death listed bares no resemblance to the actual cause. Many doctors still list "cardiorespiratory arrest" as

AT&T 11:03 AM 68%

Primary

I believe that doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis when they don't really know what caused their death. Unless someone has tested + for the virus and had symptoms and died there is no way to attribute their death to COVID-19. As you point out the # of deaths due to the "pandemic" is highly inflated and in my opinion for political gain. Keep spreading the news and your right on point analysis.

My name is and I am an Intervention Specialist (teach special ed). My own son is on the Autism spectrum, on the high functioning end. He has been struggling since this whole lockdown started. He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school.. there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

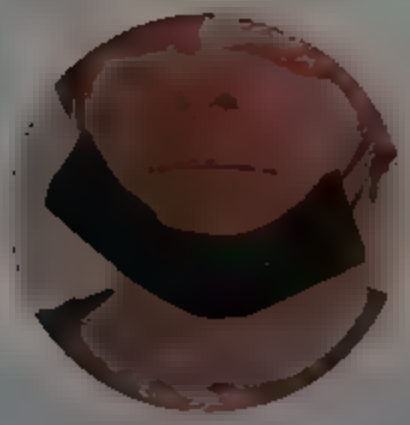
3/ Suppose the president is right. And this is the "toughest week." And we average 1,500 deaths a day. That gets us to almost 20,000 deaths by April 12. By then the trend should clearly be down, I don't think it will be arguable...



34 199 646

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 5 apr.

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

3/ And we have seen for the last 3 months that, for whatever reason, regional (or national) disparities don't lessen much once they're in place. If the rest of the US remains at that 1.4x level, deaths ex NY would be about 23,000, and the US total would be a bit under 40,000.

This could get very ugly. Hopefully only in the political sense.

Great news. @IHME_UW updated its model again - two days after the last revision. Total deaths fell from 81K to under 61K hospitalizations fell from 140K to 90K (1/3 last week's projection) m. The peak is now projected in 3 days. Can we PLEASE talk about reopening the nation?

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

2/ Children, more than anyone else, suffer immediately from the lockdowns. They're denied school. They're denied normal socializing with their friends. In many places they have even - bizarrely - been denied the chance to play outside.

41 203 1,1 mil

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

16 195 1,1 mil

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

Serious question and I hope you respond with seriousness too.

COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

"Flu +" seems like an understatement, no?

Can you say more about what you mean?

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

The @stanford antibody testing is out - it estimates ~3% of people in Santa Clara County (CA) have been infected and recovered, 50-plus times the estimate of confirmed active cases. More evidence #SARSCoV2 is far more widespread and thus less dangerous than expected.

COVID-19 Antibody Seroprevalence in Santa Clara County, California

without seroprevalence data to inform epidemic parameters. We measured the seroprevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara County. Methods On 4/3-4/4, 2,50 we tested county residents for antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 using a lateral flow immunoassay. Participants were recruited using Facebook ads targeting a representative sample of the county by demographic and geographic characteristics. We report the prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in a sample of 3,330 people, adjusting for zip code, sex, and race/ethnicity. We also adjust for test performance characteristics using 3 different estimates: i) the test manufacturer's data, ii) a sample of 37 positives and 30 negatives controls tested at Stanford, and iii) a pooled weighted of both. Results The unadjusted prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara [illegible] The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases. Population prevalence estimates can now be used to calibrate epidemic and mortality projections.

1984 and Animal Farm get the attention, but Homage to Catalonia - Orwell's non-fiction on the Spanish Civil War - might be his best.

Wow, did he hate reporters:

3/ I guess one might say that the groupthink and lies Orwell saw in Spain informed his writing in 1984 - which was published in 1949, 11 years after Homage to Catalonia.

Apropos of nothing, of course.

when he's not in school...there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

Hi Alex,

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

Thanks

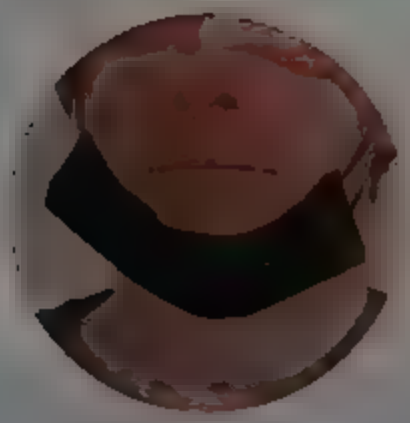
Hello Alex,

My name is nd I've been following you on Twitter quite a bit. I live in oronto, so we've actually been subjected to a lockdown for a bit longer than U.S. cities.

I'm so happy to see someone like you bringing to light the sheer insanity of the lockdowns and the crushing impact it's having on society. It infuriates me to see such a reckless experiment on humanity.



I have a three year old, so not school aged, but to say it's been a challenge is the understatement of the year. My brother, on the other hand, has two school aged children -

Media reasonably consider 20M unemployed Americans as their main contribution to DNC 2020 campaign.

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

This is important because it is all part of the Dem/liberal playbook. The fact that the media has become nothing more than gossip rags and reality tv at its worst is horrifying. And many are believing it hook, line and sinker.

There is no one more qualified to determine the needs of unique communities than healthcare providers, not government officials. The elective surgery ban is a unsophisticated reaction that will cause more harm than good.

At this point, I can't tell if the multiple, provable, counter productive measures and policies are government leadership incompetence or intentional control measures.

Eg, why TH NOT send kids back to school in Fall, at least in low density areas, given what's known now?!?!?

1/ So on Monday, @laurawags of @vice asked me for an interview, and I agreed, under certain very specifuc conditions. Let's see what happened next. Note: Laura and I have never spoken by phone - this email thread is the entirety of our communication:

Laura Wagner

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Alex Berenson

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatter-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

From a physician in Indiana who has signed and reviewed death certificates for almost 50 years: "doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis..."

Cause of death fallacy

Lee A. Fischer, M.D.

I'm a family physician who graduated med school in '72 and practiced family med in West Palm Beach for 31 years. During that time I signed hundreds of death certificates. For the last 25+ years I've reviewed and testified in hundreds of medical negligence cases. In the last 5 years 90% involved nursing home negligence. Obviously many of these nursing patients died so I review a lot of death certificates. I can tell you that more often than not the cause of death listed bares no resemblance to the actual cause. Many doctors still list "cardiorespiratory arrest" as

AT&T 11:03 AM 68%

Primary

I believe that doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis when they don't really know what caused their death. Unless someone has tested + for the virus and had symptoms and died there is no way to attribute their death to COVID-19. As you point out the # of deaths due to the "pandemic" is highly inflated and in my opinion for political gain. Keep spreading the news and your right on point analysis.

He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school.. there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? #SARSCoV2 can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

And there's a lot of evidence that many kids regress during the normal summer break - and that poor kids especially suffer, because their parent(s) may not have the time or resources to help them.

A nurse can generally take care of one to two ventilated patients as they require close monitoring. If on vent, generally will require extra IV lines or arterial lines to allow monitoring of oxygen and extra meds (more pharmacy support), respiratory therapists, lab to run tests

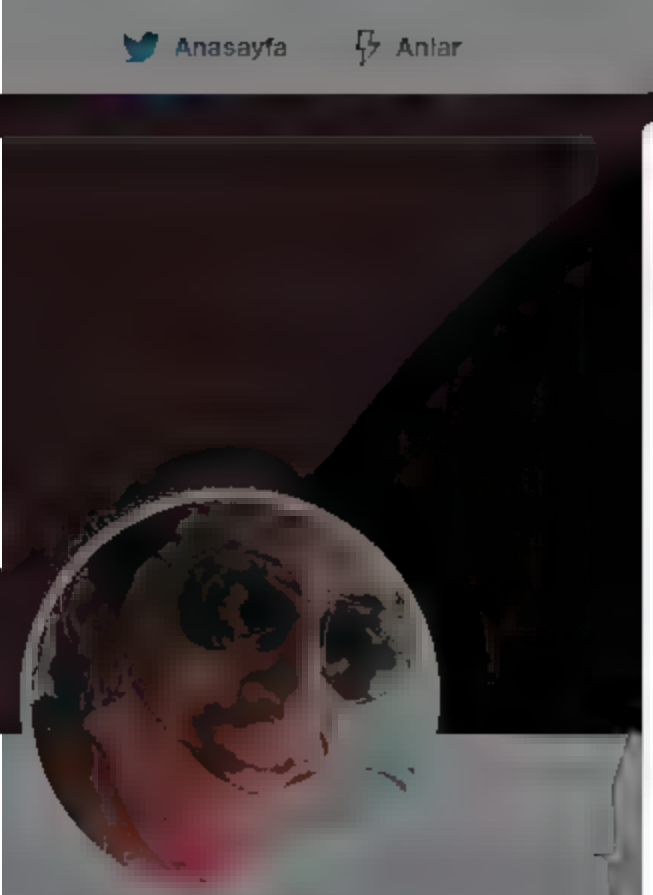
That is why we are being told not to leave our houses! To suppress the virus!!



Now when we stop suppressing, obviously the virus will come back.

The Imperial report is quite pessimistic about that scenario because it doesn't attempt to model strategies taken in Asia

1/ Morning folks. Wondering why @CDCgov is using such aggressive rules for death counts? Look - there's considerable evidence #COVID infections have peaked in the US. Even the POTUS comments last night warning about this being the "toughest week" suggest as much (deaths lag)...

2/ And the emerging data out of Florida, Southern California, etc suggest that this virus - like most respiratory viruses - doesn't do well when the weather warms and UV rays get stronger. Great news! Right? Right? Well... we're at under 9,000 deaths now.

65 224 790

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 5 apr.

3/ Suppose the president is right. And this is the "toughest week." And we average 1,500 deaths a day. That gets us to almost 20,000 deaths by April 12. By then the trend should clearly be down, I don't think it will be arguable...

34 199 646

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 5 apr.

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

Now, deaths lag, but by weeks - not months. And hospitalizations should lag only by days. Either the virus has truly become less virulent or the people being infected are far less at risk.

without seroprevalence data to inform epidemic parameters. We measured the seroprevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara County. Methods On 4/3-4/4, 2,50 adult county residents for antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 using a lateral flow immunoassay. Participants were recruited using Facebook ads targeting a representative sample of the county by demographic and geographic characteristics. We report the prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in a sample of 3,330 people, adjusting for zip code, sex, and race/ethnicity. We also adjust for test performance characteristics using 3 different estimates: i) the test manufacturer's data, ii) a sample of 37 positives and 30 negatives controls tested at Stanford, and iii) a pooled weighted of both. Results The unadjusted prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara [illegible] The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases. Population prevalence estimates can now be used to calibrate epidemic and mortality projections.

Hi Alex,

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

Thanks

Hello Alex,

My name is nd I've been following you on Twitter quite a bit. I live in oronto, so we've actually been subjected to a lockdown for a bit longer than U.S. cities.

I'm so happy to see someone like you bringing to light the sheer insanity of the lockdowns and the crushing impact it's having on society. It infuriates me to see such a reckless experiment on humanity.

I have a three year old, so not school aged, but to say it's been a challenge is the understatement of the year. My brother, on the other hand, has two school aged children -

Media reasonably consider 20M unemployed Americans as their main contribution to DNC 2020 campaign.

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

Even if the death rate has been underreported by a factor of 2 (which seems unlikely), this is maybe the strongest evidence yet that governments should end ALL lockdowns immediately.

Every death is tragic. But failing to admit that many people under 50 who die of COVID have diabetes, obesity, and/or real heart issues is wrong.

Media reasonably consider 20M unemployed Americans as their main contribution to DNC 2020 campaign.

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

1/ One last point on the [illegible] model: It now predicts about 15,600 New York state deaths. About the only thing the model has gotten right is short term death counts; that figure seems at least marginally plausible...

2/ But that implies that the rest of the US will have about 65,000 - 4x+ NYS. Right now, the rest of the country is at about 1.4x NYS - and the epidemic does not seem to be accelerating elsewhere...

3/ And we have seen for the last 3 months that, for whatever reason, regional (or national) disparities don't lessen much once they're in place. If the rest of the US remains at that 1.4x level, deaths ex NY would be about 23,000, and the US total would be a bit under 40,000.

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

4/ Vance broadly ignores all the non-economic effects of the lockdown too - closing schools, even though kids don't appear to be at risk - and the general fraying of society that has already begun, social shaming, neighbors calling out the police on neighbors...

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

6 37 227

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 8. 4.

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

If we tanked the economy, drove tens of millions out of work, wiped out 401ks of retirees, interrupted the education of our children, & put $2trillion on a credit card for less deaths than the seasonal flu, you might see some civil unrest in this country like we've never seen.

And imagine if it turns out this has been going through the country for months, and they all acted 2-3 months too late. (In the Dems case, while perusing impeachment instead)

This could get very ugly. Hopefully only in the political sense.

about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

"Flu +" seems like an understatement, no?

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

The crisis in the US hospital system is real and spreading nationwide: beckershospitalreview.com/finance/49-hos

1. Allentown, Pa.-based Lehigh Valley Health Network has furloughed about 900 employees who work at its physician practices, according to The Morning Call. The email obtained by the publication stated that furloughed workers can return to work after in-person patient visits return to normal levels.

2. Halifax Health, based in Daytona Beach, Fla, has placed 300 staff members on a mandatory four-month furlough, according to The Daytona Beach News Journal. The news comes just nine days after the system asked for volunteers to take furloughs. The health system is also mandating that nonclinical staff not included in the furlough take one day off per week.

3. Citing financial pressure from the COVID-19 pandemic, Escondido, Calif.-based Palomar Health has issued temporary layoffs for 221 employees, according to NBC San Diego. The furloughs will last 21 days and may be extended. Palomar Health said it is facing a significant revenue decline and incurred more

1984 and Animal Farm get the attention, but Homage to Catalonia - Orwell's non-fiction on the Spanish Civil War - might be his best.

Wow, did he hate reporters:

3/ I guess one might say that the groupthink and lies Orwell saw in Spain informed his writing in 1984 - which was published in 1949, 11 years after Homage to Catalonia.

Apropos of nothing, of course.

when he's not in school...there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

Hi Alex,

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

Thanks

Hello Alex,

My name is nd I've been following you on Twitter quite a bit. I live in Toronto, so we've actually been subjected to a lockdown for a bit longer than U.S. cities.

I'm so happy to see someone like you bringing to light the sheer insanity of the lockdowns and the crushing impact it's having on society. It infuriates me to see such a reckless experiment on humanity.

I have a three year old, so not school aged, but to say it's been a challenge is the understatement of the year. My brother, on the other hand, has two school aged children -

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

> Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson
> "That'll be documented too, that you're uncooperative." Wisconsin cops hassle a woman at home for the crime of letting her child play with other kids. This happened. In the United States of America. This week. twitter.com/GPIngersoll/st...

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? #SARSCoV2 can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

Remember - it is only April 21. In most states, schools have been out for only about a month. Closing through the end of the school year means another TWO months of lost schooling, and a five-plus-month break overall...

33 64 318

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 22 квіт.
And there's a lot of evidence that many kids regress during the normal summer break - and that poor kids especially suffer, because their parent(s) may not have the time or resources to help them.

Hi Alex,

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

Thanks

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

HUGE findings from Iran - a true random antibody sample of households finds that 21-33% of people have been infected and the true infection fatality rate is roughly 1 in 1,000 - among the lowest figures yet published.

Even if the death rate has been underreported by a factor of 2 (which seems unlikely), this is maybe the strongest evidence yet that governments should end ALL lockdowns immediately.

1/ In early March New York City had probably under 10,000 #sarscov2 infections. By mid-April it conservatively had over 2 million, per serology testing. That's ~50,000 new infections every day. Possibly 100,000+ a day at peak. AND tests capture a new infection for 5-10 days...

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

Thanks

Hello Alex,

My name is nd I've been following you on Twitter quite a bit. I live in oronto, so we've actually been subjected to a lockdown for a bit longer than U.S. cities.

I'm so happy to see someone like you bringing to light the sheer insanity of the lockdowns and the crushing impact it's having on society. It infuriates me to see such a reckless experiment on humanity.

I have a three year old, so not school aged, but to say it's been a challenge is the understatement of the year. My brother, on the other hand, has two school aged children -

when he's not in school...there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

Media reasonably consider 20M unemployed Americans as their main contribution to DNC 2020 campaign.

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

The @stanford antibody testing is out - it estimates ~3% of people in Santa Clara County (CA) have been infected and recovered, 50-plus times the estimate of confirmed active cases. More evidence #SARSCoV2 is far more widespread and thus less dangerous than expected.

COVID-19 Antibody Seroprevalence in Santa Clara County, California

This article is a preprint and has not been certified by peer review [what does this mean?]

without seroprevalence data to inform epidemic parameters. We measured the seroprevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara County. Methods On 4/3-4/4, 3,330 adult county residents for antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 using a lateral flow immunoassay. Participants were recruited using Facebook ads targeting a representative sample of the county by demographic and geographic characteristics. We report the prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in a sample of 3,300 people, adjusting for zip code, sex, and race/ethnicity. We also adjust for test performance characteristics using 3 different estimates: i) the test manufacturer's data, ii) a sample of 37 positives and 30 negatives controls tested at Stanford, and iii) a pooled weighted of both. Results The unadjusted prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara [illegible] The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases. Population prevalence estimates can now be used to calibrate epidemic and mortality projections.

without seroprevalence data to inform epidemic parameters. We measured the seroprevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara County. Methods On 4/3-4/4, 3,330 adult county residents for antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 using a lateral flow immunoassay. Participants were recruited using Facebook ads targeting a representative sample of the county by demographic and geographic characteristics. We report the prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in a sample of 3,300 people, adjusting for zip code, sex, and race/ethnicity. We also adjust for test performance characteristics using 3 different estimates: i) the test manufacturer's data, ii) a sample of 37 positives and 30 negatives controls tested at Stanford, and iii) a pooled weighted of both. Results The unadjusted prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara [illegible] The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases. Population prevalence estimates can now be used to calibrate epidemic and mortality projections.

The @stanford antibody testing is out - it estimates ~3% of people in Santa Clara County (CA) have been infected and recovered, 50-plus times the estimate of confirmed active cases. More evidence #SARSCoV2 is far more widespread and thus less dangerous than expected.

1/And new from @USC @lapublichealth: An antibody study showing 4% of LA has been infected. With a clear explanation:

"Infections from the new coronavirus are far more widespread - and the fatality rate much lower - in L.A. County than previously thought."

"The estimates also suggest that we might have to recalibrate disease prediction models and rethink public health strategies."

Even if the death rate has been underreported by a factor of 2 (which seems unlikely), this is maybe the strongest evidence yet that governments should end ALL lockdowns immediately.

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

4 23 158

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

4/ Vance broadly ignores all the non-economic effects of the lockdown too - closing schools, even though kids don't appear to be at risk - and the general fraying of society that has already begun, social shaming, neighbors calling out the police on neighbors...

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

6 37 228

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 8 avr.

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

3/ And we have seen for the last 3 months that, for whatever reason, regional (or national) disparities don't lessen much once they're in place. If the rest of the US remains at that 1.4x level, deaths ex NY would be about 23,000, and the US total would be a bit under 40,000.

If we tanked the economy, drove tens of millions out of work, wiped out 401ks of retirees, interrupted the education of our children, & put $2trillion on a credit card for less deaths than the seasonal flu, you might see some civil unrest in this country like we've never seen.

I'm sincerely confused on why we're (at least trying) to model ourselves at the places that have had the worst outcomes?

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

08:54 - 10 квіт. 2020

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 квіт.
2/ But it's crucial to understand WHY they failed.

There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.

9 152 568

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 квіт.
3/ The models assumed (not unreasonably) that in places like New York, lockdowns had come TOO LATE. Between March 17 and March 25, hospitalizations in NY rose 7X. The models assumed that because of the time lag, the rise would go on UNTIL THE EFFECTS OF THE LOCKDOWN KICKED IN...

11 139 537

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 квіт.
4/ By that point, >5,000 new patients every day would need hospitalization

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

Serious question and I hope you respond with seriousness too.

COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

"Flu +" seems like an understatement, no?

1/ So on Monday, @laurawags of @vice asked me for an interview, and I agreed, under certain very specifuc conditions. Let's see what happened next. Note: Laura and I have never spoken by phone - this email thread is the entirety of our communication:

Laura Wagner

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Alex Berenson

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbot-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

My name is and I am an Intervention Specialist (teach special ed). My own son is on the Autism spectrum, on the high functioning end. He has been struggling since this whole lockdown started. He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school.. there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well.

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

1/ Kudos to @startribune for becoming the first big newspaper to publish a balanced article on the issues around lockdowns. It mentions the risks to food production and skyrocketing unemployment up high, notes that 80% of the state's deaths are in long-term care facilities...

Gov. Tim Walz faces a key decision this week about whether to lift a stay-at-home order for a COVID-19 pandemic that is proving most deadly for long-term care residents, gumming up food production and spreading at a rate that nobody yet comprehends.

The death toll from COVID-19 reached 286 in Minnesota on Monday, but 223 involved long-term care facilities residents — who remain at greatest risk from the coronavirus infection due to age and existing support. Such projections are gross estimates."

More importantly: this is everyone who may need ventilation OVER THE COURSE OF THE EPIDEMIC...

@AlexBerenson

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

5/ Here's a link to the paper (thoughtfully provided by the Times) so you can read and judge it for yourself.

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

6/ Final point: the paper concludes the real bottleneck is in trained staff and "priority should focus not only on increasing [ventilators]... but on growing the number of trained professionals."

But I guess bashing the WH for not nationalizing ventilator production is more fun.

A nurse can generally take care of one to two ventilated patients as they require close monitoring. If on vent, generally will require extra IV lines or arterial lines to allow monitoring of oxygen and extra meds (more pharmacy support), respiratory therapists, lab to run tests

2/ Peaks occur in May or June; and the strategy is assumed to run for at LEAST three months. I don't know what to say to anyone who does not see this forecast as very different than what Professor Ferguson said yesterday...

3/ Now, the Imperial College team did offer one scenario which it speculated might enable beds not to be overwhelmed in the short term - a heavy "suppression" strategy lasting a minimum of FIVE months, through September at a minimum...

EXACTLY.
That is why we are being told not to leave our houses! To suppress the virus!!

Now when we stop suppressing, obviously the virus will come back.

The Imperial report is quite pessimistic about that scenario because it doesn't attempt to model strategies taken in Asia

The @IHME_UW model vs. reality for New York State, April 4: more of the same, 65,400 beds projected, 15,905 actually used (new hospitalizations fell notably day-over-day); 12,000 ICU beds projected, 4,100 used. Still basically fiction, but at least it's not getting MORE wrong.

Great news. @IHME_UW updated its model again - two days after the last revision. Total deaths fell from 81K to under 61K hospitalizations fell from 140K to 90K (1/3 last week's projection) m. The peak is now projected in 3 days. Can we PLEASE talk about reopening the nation?

1/ #COVID-19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."

about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

This is so wrong.....

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

"Flu +" seems like an understatement, no?

Can you say more about what you mean?

1/ So on Monday, @laurawags of @vice asked me for an interview, and I agreed, under certain very specifuc conditions. Let's see what happened next. Note: Laura and I have never spoken by phone - this email thread is the entirety of our communication:

Laura Wagner

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has gifted coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Alex Berenson

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbler-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

I believe that doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis when they don't really know what caused their death. Unless someone has tested + for the virus and had symptoms and died there is no way to attribute their death to COVID-19. As you point out the # of deaths due to the "pandemic" is highly inflated and in my opinion for political gain. Keep spreading the news and your right on point analysis.

Cause of death fallacy

L Lee A. Fischer, M.D.

I'm a family physician who graduated med school in '72 and practiced family med in West Palm Beach for 31 years. During that time I signed hundreds of death certificates. For the last 25+ years I've reviewed and testified in hundreds of medical negligence cases. In the last 5 years 90% involved nursing home negligence. Obviously many of these nursing patients died so I review a lot of death certificates. I can tell you that more often than not the cause of death listed bares no resemblance to the actual cause. Many doctors still list "cardiorespiratory arrest" as

Hello Alex,

My name is nd I've been following you on Twitter quite a bit. I live in Toronto, so we've actually been subjected to a lockdown for a bit longer than U.S. cities.

I'm so happy to see someone like you bringing to light the sheer insanity of the lockdowns and the crushing impact it's having on society. It infuriates me to see such a reckless experiment on humanity.

I have a three year old, so not school aged, but to say it's been a challenge is the understatement of the year. My brother, on the other hand, has two school aged children -

Media reasonably consider 20M unemployed Americans as their main contribution to DNC 2020 campaign.

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

I keep hearing - from multiple sources/perspectives, meaning patients' families, medical staff, and high-level types - that the care Covid patients received in many NY hospitals was deeply problematic and caused many excess deaths. Getting people on the record is tough, though...

Talk to Erin Marie Olszewski about this. She is the nurse that went undercover in NYC to expose the terrible standard of care patients received.

Three weeks after the spike in positive #SARSCoV2 tests began in Florida, hospitals have lots of beds. Remember: hospitalizations should come 5-8 days after a + test (which is 5 days after infection). Will the huge numbers this week blow up the system? So far no evidence of that.

last posting for my state said peak resource use would be April 9, now says it WAS March 23.

First "social distancing" and school closure started March 18, restaurants, etc., closed March 25.

So we peaked BEFORE the significant closures even began?

This could get very ugly. Hopefully only in the political sense.

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

4/ Vance broadly ignores all the non-economic effects of the lockdown too - closing schools, even though kids don't appear to be at risk - and the general fraying of society that has already begun, social shaming, neighbors calling out the police on neighbors...

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

Great news. @IHME_UW updated its model again - two days after the last revision. Total deaths fell from 81K to under 61K hospitalizations fell from 140K to 90K (1/3 last week's projection) m. The peak is now projected in 3 days. Can we PLEASE talk about reopening the nation?

1/ #COVID—19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."

about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

My name is and I am an Intervention Specialist (teach special ed). My own son is on the Autism spectrum, on the high functioning end. He has been struggling since this whole lockdown started. He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school.. there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well.

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

1. Allentown, Pa.-based Lehigh Valley Health Network has furloughed about 900 employees who work at its physician practices, according to The Morning Call. The email obtained by the publication stated that furloughed workers can return to work after in-person patient visits return to normal levels.

2. Halifax Health, based in Daytona Beach, Fla, has placed 300 staff members on a mandatory four-month furlough, according to The Daytona Beach News Journal. The news comes just nine days after the system asked for volunteers to take furloughs. The health system is also mandating that nonclinical staff not included in the furlough take one day off per week.

3. Citing financial pressure from the COVID-19 pandemic, Escondido, Calif.-based Palomar Health has issued temporary layoffs for 221 employees, according to NBC San Diego. The furloughs will last 21 days and may be extended. Palomar Health said it is facing a significant revenue decline and incurred more

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

1/ One last point on the [illegible] model: It now predicts about 15,600 New York state deaths. About the only thing the model has gotten right is short term death counts; that figure seems at least marginally plausible...

2/ But that implies that the rest of the US will have about 65,000 - 4x+ NYS. Right now, the rest of the country is at about 1.4x NYS - and the epidemic does not seem to be accelerating elsewhere...

3/ And we have seen for the last 3 months that, for whatever reason, regional (or national) disparities don't lessen much once they're in place. If the rest of the US remains at that 1.4x level, deaths ex NY would be about 23,000, and the US total would be a bit under 40,000.

If we tanked the economy, drove tens of millions out of work, wiped out 401ks of retirees, interrupted the education of our children, & put $2trillion on a credit card for less deaths than the seasonal flu, you might see some civil unrest in this country like we've never seen.

And imagine if it turns out this has been going through the country for months, and they all acted 2-3 months too late. (In the Dems case, while perusing impeachment instead)

This could get very ugly. Hopefully only in the political sense.

1/ This email came from a German reader. To summarize: on April 15 the official German public health/disease control institute published a paper showing that moderate social distancing reduced #SARS_CoV2 spread but the hard lockdown was useless.

2/ Of note, the paper assumes a reproduction cycle of 4 days. Thus the epidemic can spread fast - and will be hugely sensitive to changes in R (how many people 1 infected person infects in turn). At an R of 3.1 with a cycle of 4 days, 1 infection will become 10,000 in a month!

A nurse can generally take care of one to two ventilated patients as they require close monitoring. If on vent, generally will require extra IV lines or arterial lines to allow monitoring of oxygen and extra meds (more pharmacy support), respiratory therapists, lab to run tests

6/ Final point: the paper concludes the real bottleneck is in trained staff and "priority should focus not only on increasing [ventilators]... but on growing the number of trained professionals."

But I guess bashing the WH for not nationalizing ventilator production is more fun.

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? #SARSCoV2 can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

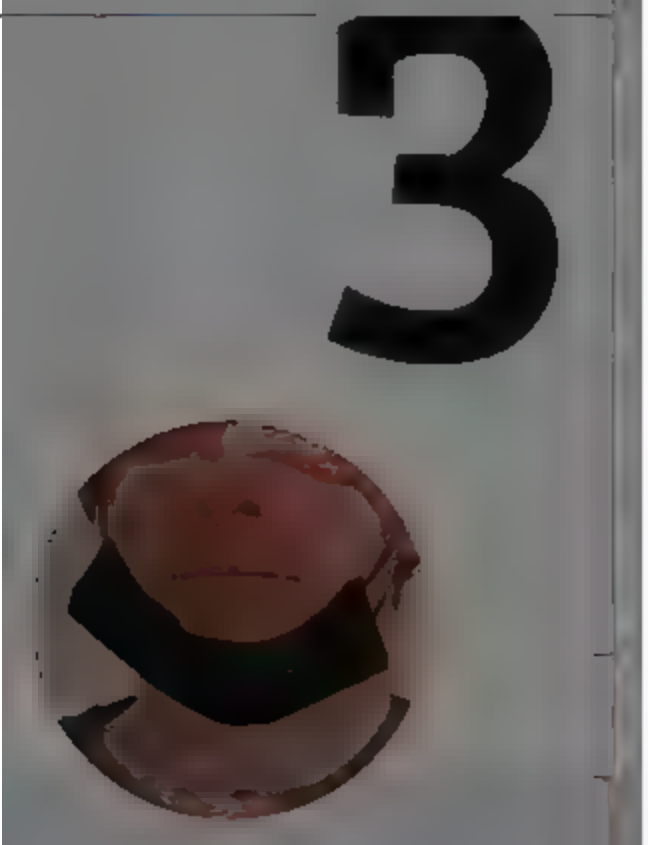
1/ Kudos to @startribune for becoming the first big newspaper to publish a balanced article on the issues around lockdowns. It mentions the risks to food production and skyrocketing unemployment up high, notes that 80% of the state's deaths are in long-term care facilities...

By JEREMY OLSON , STAR TRIBUNE

Gov. Tim Walz faces a key decision this week about whether to lift a stay-at-home order for a COVID-19 pandemic that is proving most deadly for long-term care residents, gumming up food production and spreading at a rate that nobody yet comprehends.



The death toll from COVID-19 reached 286 in Minnesota on Monday, but 223 involved long-term care facilities residents — who remain at greatest risk from the coronavirus infection due to age and existing

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

HUGE findings from Iran - a true random antibody sample of households finds that 21-33% of people have been infected and the true infection fatality rate is roughly 1 in 1,000 - among the lowest figures yet published.

Even if the death rate has been underreported by a factor of 2 (which seems unlikely), this is maybe the strongest evidence yet that governments should end ALL lockdowns immediately.

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

1/ Hey, remember how everyone who worked at that meatpacking plant in South Dakota got coronavirus and was going to die? This @nytimes story was April 15. As of now, 16 days later, South Dakota has 17 deaths total - ONE in anyone under 50, none under 40...

South Dakota Meat Plant Is Now Country's Biggest Coronavirus Hot Spot

Refugees from around the world worked at the Smithfield pork factory in Sioux Falls. Now they face mounting illness and the sudden loss of their jobs.

HUGE findings from Iran - a true random antibody sample of households finds that 21-33% of people have been infected and the true infection fatality rate is roughly 1 in 1,000 - among the lowest figures yet published.

Even if the death rate has been underreported by a factor of 2 (which seems unlikely), this is maybe the strongest evidence yet that governments should end ALL lockdowns immediately.

In this case I understand the choice to isolate nursing homes to protect residents from #COVID, but @wsj has another example of the way lockdowns kill: 15,000 excess US deaths from Alzheimer's this year. Maybe allow visits for people with antibodies?

Coronavirus Pandemic Led to Surge in Alzheimer's Deaths

As Covid-19 raced through long-term care facilities, it amplified mortality risks for those with Alzheimer's and other forms of dementia dementia than otherwise would have, health officials believe, pointing to how the coronavirus pandemic has exacted a higher fatality toll than official numbers have shown.

As Covid-19 devastated older Americans this spring, often by racing through nursing homes, the deadly outbreaks compounded the devastation of Alzheimer's and other forms of degenerative brain disorders that are common among elderly residents in long-term care facilities.

Roughly 109,000 people died from likely represent collateral damage, according to Robert Anderson, chief of the mortality-statistics branch at the CDC's National Center for Health Statistics. People with advanced Alzheimer's and dementia are often in fragile health, dependent on steady routines and close care from family members and other caregivers but vulnerable to disruption.

"It's one fall, and it sets everything off. It's one day of no fluids and they become dehydrated and it sets off a chain of events," said Nicole Fowler, associate director at Indiana University's Center for Aging Research. "It's

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

The crisis in the US hospital system is real and spreading nationwide:

1. Allentown, Pa.-based Lehigh Valley Health Network has furloughed about 900 employees who work at its physician practices, according to The Morning Call. The email obtained by the publication stated that furloughed workers can return to work after in-person patient visits return to normal levels.

2. Halifax Health, based in Daytona Beach, Fla, has placed 300 staff members on a mandatory four-month furlough, according to The Daytona Beach News Journal. The news comes just nine days after the system asked for volunteers to take furloughs. The health system is also mandating that nonclinical staff not included in the furlough take one day off per week.

3. Citing financial pressure from the COVID-19 pandemic, Escondido, Calif.-based Palomar Health has issued temporary layoffs for 221 employees, according to NBC San Diego. The furloughs will last 21 days and may be extended. Palomar Health said it is facing a significant revenue decline and incurred more

Media reasonably consider 20M unemployed Americans as their main contribution to DNC 2020 campaign.

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

Hi Alex,

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

It would be exceptionally odd for Sweden to repudiate its strategy considering the rest of the world is moving toward it and Norway has said it probably should have acted more like Sweden. But Team Apocalypse will look for anything to back its failed strategy.

1. Allentown, Pa.-based Lehigh Valley Health Network has furloughed about 900 employees who work at its physician practices, according to The Morning Call. The email obtained by the publication stated that furloughed workers can return to work after in-person patient visits return to normal levels.

2. Halifax Health, based in Daytona Beach, Fla, has placed 300 staff members on a mandatory four-month furlough, according to The Daytona Beach News Journal. The news comes just nine days after the system asked for volunteers to take furloughs. The health system is also mandating that nonclinical staff not included in the furlough take one day off per week.

3. Citing financial pressure from the COVID-19 pandemic, Escondido, Calif.-based Palomar Health has issued temporary layoffs for 221 employees, according to NBC San Diego. The furloughs will last 21 days and may be extended. Palomar Health said it is facing a significant revenue decline and incurred more

Hi Alex,

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

Thanks

Sure. Remind me again how opening schools to children who are at ~0 risk from the virus and extremely low risk of transmitting it either to each other or adults impacts community transmission. Oh, wait, it doesn't. As that chart shows.

The Netherlands reopened schools fully on 6/8 at the below point in their epidemic curve (white box). We've failed to achieve that kind of suppression. Opening US schools now invites unknown risks. #Covid_19

2/ In fact, the report says explicitly that "the initial duration of measures... will be several months."

16 March 2020 Imperial College COVID-19 Response Team

is therefore population-wide social distancing combined with home isolation of cases and school and university closure.

To avoid a rebound in transmission, these policies will need to be maintained until large stocks of vaccine are available to immunise the population – which could be 18 months or more. Adaptive hospital surveillance-based triggers for switching on and off population-wide social distancing and school closure offer greater robustness to uncertainty than fixed duration interventions and can be adapted for regional use (e.g. at the state level in the US). Given local epidemics are not perfectly synchronised, local policies are also more efficient and can achieve comparable levels of suppression to national policies while being in force for a slightly smaller proportion of the time. However, we estimate that for a national GB policy, social distancing would need to be in force for at least 2/3 of the time (for $R_0 \geq 2.4$, see Table 4) until a vaccine was available.

However, there are very large uncertainties around the transmission of this virus, the likely effectiveness of different policies and the extent to which the population spontaneously adopts risk reducing behaviours. This means it is difficult to be definitive about the likely initial duration of measures which will be required, except that it will be several months. Future decisions on when and for how long to relax policies will need to be informed by ongoing surveillance.

The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures akin to the strategies being employed in South Korea today. Technology – such as mobile phone apps that

As Neil explicitly stated in the testimony you're all up in arms about - those "new" numbers require the social distancing measures kept in place until enough testing is available to follow South Korea.

The @IHME_UW model vs. reality for New York State, April 4: more of the same, 65,400 beds projected, 15,905 actually used (new hospitalizations fell notably day-over-day); 12,000 ICU beds projected, 4,100 used. Still basically fiction, but at least it's not getting MORE wrong.

If we tanked the economy, drove tens of millions out of work, wiped out 401ks of retirees, interrupted the education of our children, & put $2trillion on a credit card for less deaths than the seasonal flu, you might see some civil unrest in this country like we've never seen.

If we tanked the economy, drove tens of millions out of work, wiped out 401ks of retirees, interrupted the education of our children, & put $2trillion on a credit card for less deaths than the seasonal flu, you might see some civil unrest in this country like we've never seen.

SimulationCommander @SimulationComm3 · 6 apr

And imagine if it turns out this has been going through the country for months, and they all acted 2-3 months too late. (In the Dems case, while perusing impeachment instead)

This could get very ugly. Hopefully only in the political sense.

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

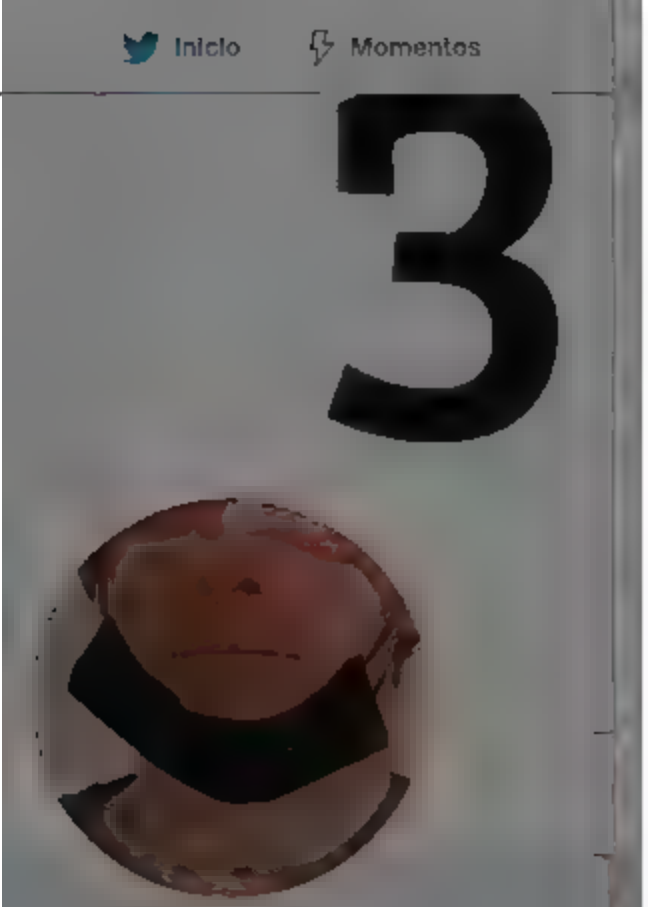
2/ Children, more than anyone else, suffer immediately from the lockdowns. They're denied school. They're denied normal socializing with their friends. In many places they have even - bizarrely - been denied the chance to play outside.

41 203 1,1 mil

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.



3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

16 195 1,1 mil

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

Serious question and I hope you respond with seriousness too.

COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

"Flu +" seems like an understatement, no?

Can you say more about what you mean?

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? #SARSCoV2 can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

Gov. Tim Walz faces a key decision this week about whether to lift a stay-at-home order for a COVID-19 pandemic that is proving most deadly for long-term care residents, gumming up food production and spreading at a rate that nobody yet comprehends.

The death toll from COVID-19 reached 286 in Minnesota on Monday, but 223 involved long-term care facilities residents — who remain at greatest risk from the coronavirus infection due to age and existing is therefore population-wide social distancing combined with home isolation of cases and school and university closure.

To avoid a rebound in transmission, these policies will need to be maintained until large stocks of vaccine are available to immunise the population – which could be 18 months or more. Adaptive hospital surveillance-based triggers for switching on and off population-wide social distancing and school closure offer greater robustness to uncertainty than fixed duration interventions and can be adapted for regional use (e.g. at the state level in the US). Given local epidemics are not perfectly synchronised, local policies are also more efficient and can achieve comparable levels of suppression to national policies while being in force for a slightly smaller proportion of the time. However, we estimate that for a national GB policy, social distancing would need to be in force for at least 2/3 of the time (for $R_0 = 2.4$, see Table 4) until a vaccine was available.

However, there are very large uncertainties around the transmission of this virus, the likely effectiveness of different policies and the extent to which the population spontaneously adopts risk reducing behaviours. This means it is difficult to be definitive about the likely initial duration of measures which will be required, except that it will be several months. Future decisions on when and for how long to relax policies will need to be informed by ongoing surveillance.

The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures akin to the strategies being employed in South Korea today. Technologies – such as mobile phone apps that

2/ And the emerging data out of Florida, Southern California, etc suggest that this virus - like most respiratory viruses - doesn't do well when the weather warms and UV rays get stronger. Great news! Right? Right? Well... we're at under 9,000 deaths now.

65 224 790

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 5 apr.

3/ Suppose the president is right. And this is the "toughest week." And we average 1,500 deaths a day. That gets us to almost 20,000 deaths by April 12. By then the trend should clearly be down, I don't think it will be arguable...

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

I'm so happy to see someone like you bringing to light the sheer insanity of the lockdowns and the crushing impact it's having on society. It infuriates me to see such a reckless experiment on humanity.

I have a three year old, so not school aged, but to say it's been a challenge is the understatement of the year. My brother, on the other hand, has two school aged children -

1. Allentown, Pa.-based Lehigh Valley Health Network has furloughed about 900 employees who work at its physician practices, according to The Morning Call. The email obtained by the publication stated that furloughed workers can return to work after in-person patient visits return to normal levels.

2. Halifax Health, based in Daytona Beach, Fla, has placed 300 staff members on a mandatory four-month furlough, according to The Daytona Beach News Journal. The news comes just nine days after the system asked for volunteers to take furloughs. The health system is also mandating that nonclinical staff not included in the furlough take one day off per week.

3. Citing financial pressure from the COVID-19 pandemic, Escondido, Calif.-based Palomar Health has issued temporary layoffs for 221 employees, according to NBC San Diego. The furloughs will last 21 days and may be extended. Palomar Health said it is facing a significant revenue decline and incurred more

This is awful. 17 years ago, Howell Raines had to quit as editor of the NYT because a reporter he'd championed had made up stories and other reporters were rightly furious. Today James Bennet had to quit because his page ran an op-ed - FROM A SENATOR - that made reporters mad...

Nicholas Bogel-Burroughs @NickAtNews
Inbox: James Bennet is out as opinion editor of The New York Times after the publication of the "Send in the Troops" op-ed by Sen. Tom Cotton that led to outrage among staff and readers....

The lesson couldn't be clearer. Last year, [illegible] ran this piece from me. There's no way that would happen now. The transformation of the Times into the New York Village Voice just took another big step forward.
